There is a story about the horse trader in the hills of West Virginia.

He was a sharp dealer but he always justified his horse trading by quoting the Bible. He knew just what passage to use in every case.

On one occasion he had a very sick horse on his hands. He tried to sell it but everyone in the area knew the horse was sick and they wouldn't touch it.

Then a stranger came along and it wasn't long before he was riding out of town on the sick horse, as the horse trader counted a thick wad of notes.

This upset the horse trader's wife very much. 'Don't tell me you sold that sick horse to someone?'

'Yea,' he said, 'a preacher passed through and I sold him the horse.'

'A man of the cloth!' she said.

'Oh, it's all right,' he replied, 'as the Bible says, he was a stranger and I took him in!'
